Transit union suspends talks

► OC Transpo drivers' current contract expires at the end of March ► Driver scheduling was a major issue in 2008-09 transit strike ► City shoving schedule 'down operators' throats,' union boss says

The transit union has suspended contract talks and given the city until tomorrow to make concessions on scheduling before it takes its case to arbitration.

The city's proposed schedule for April "continues to exacerbate the reasons why there is not likely any hopeful sign whatsoever for positive labour relations in 2011 or the foreseeable future," ATU 279 president Mike Aldrich wrote transit chair Dianne Deans on Thursday.

"The only thing I can tell you is that the letter was addressed to me, I forwarded it to our legal department and I expect that they will answer the union," Deans said.

► 12-year-old receives United Way Community Builder Award for raising money for children's hospices

OTTAWA@METRONEWS.CA

Grade 7 student Kate Reeve was buzzing around like a bumblebee in the Glebe Community Centre yesterday watching six months of planning unfold on the catwalk.

Reeve got the idea to organize a charity fashion show after reading about the struggle of terminally ill children at Vancouver's Canuck Place.

"I read about a terminally ill girl with lung cancer staying there and I thought I should do something to help them," said Reeve, who is 12. "They told me about Roger's House (a palliative-care centre for children) in Ottawa and I thought I should help both."

The planning started last summer, and after several emails and phone calls, Reeve got local designers, models and sponsors on board. Her goal was to raise $5,000, and she plans to split the funds raised to give to both hospices.

She said the most difficult part of organizing the extravaganza was staying on top of all the little details.

"Call this person, email this person, you have to remember to do this and that," she said.

Reeve still had fun watching the models on the catwalk and said she looks forward to organizing another fundraiser in the future.

Royal invites in the mail

Keep an eye on the mailbox — Britain's Prince William and bride-to-be Kate Middleton have sent out invites to their hotly anticipated royal wedding to around 1,900 guests.

Military personnel and charity workers will mingle with European royalty, diplomats, and the family and friends of the couple at the Westminster Abbey ceremony on April 29, St. James's Palace said yesterday.

Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh will lead a group of 50 members of the British royal family at the wedding, while around 40 representatives of foreign royal families — likely to include dignitaries from Spain, Sweden and Greece — will also attend.

It isn't yet known whether celebrities including singer Elton John — a friend of William's mother Diana, the Princess of Wales — or Kanye West, a favourite of the prince who performed at a 2007 tribute concert for his mother, are among those who'll receive a prized invite.

Britain's Sunday Express newspaper reported that footballer David Beckham and his wife, Victoria, are on the royal guest list.

One guest already ruled out is Sarah Ferguson, the Duchess of York.

In a statement, William's office said it would not disclose details of individual guests.

Canadian rallies support Libyans

► More than 200 killed since Wednesday ► Demonstrators calling for Libya leader to resign

There were several rallies in Canada this weekend to show support for protesters in Libya who defied a crackdown by leader Moammar Gadhafi's regime by returning yesterday to the flashpoint city of Benghazi to demand the ruler be overthrown.

More than 100 people rallied in Toronto yesterday. Rallies were also held on Parliament Hill and at the Manitoba legislature on Saturday.

Yesterday, Libyan forces fired machine guns at thousands of mourners marching in a funeral for anti-government protesters in the city of Benghazi, a day after commandos and foreign mercenaries attacked demonstrators with assault rifles and other heavy weapons.

At least 204 people have been killed in the oil-rich country since Wednesday.

Faceoff on the moon?

► Canucks hope to land hockey puck on lunar surface ► Teams across four continents to compete for big, pie-in-the-sky prize money

A group of Canadian space buffs wants to make a hockey puck boldly go where no hockey puck has gone before: the surface of the moon.

The Vancouver group is one of 29 teams from 17 countries competing in the latest race to the moon: the Google Lunar X Prize, funded by the web giant to encourage commercial space development.

Alex Dobrianski, Plan B's team leader, says it will take him 18 months to complete his lunar craft.

The pucks are about much more than symbolism, however; they also carry a utilitarian function.

Dobrianski says three pucks would be mounted on the vehicle's motors and would help provide stability, to keep it from tipping over.

"When you need to orient a probe, the normal way is to use a special weight," Dobrianski said.

"When I looked at what weight would be suitable I just picked up my son's hockey puck and took it in my hands and found that, 'Yeah, found it's heavy and it will be absolutely perfect for this job.'"

Loan program racks up record losses: Report

- Revenue does not come close to covering loss claims
- Taxpayers on hook for up to 85 per cent of losses

A federal loan program for small business paid the banks and other financial institutions a record $113 million in loss claims last year, most of it in hard-hit Ontario, a new report says.

The Canada Small Business Financing Program also guaranteed about $957 million in new loans in 2009-10, which means the annual loss rate hit about 12 per cent.

The report, tabled in Parliament, shows that the troubled program continues to suffer from red ink and a dwindling number of customers.

The big trouble spot was Ontario, where only about one-third of the new loans

The loan-guarantee fund dates from 1999. The fund has so far guaranteed more than $11 billion in small-business loans issued by banks, credit unions and other financial institutions.

were issued but more than half the losses occurred.

Industry Minister Tony Clement defended the program, saying in the report's introduction that it "continues to be a successful mechanism for facilitating asset-backed debt financing to business."

But a KPMG study last year found that it has incurred net losses to Ottawa of more than $300 million and that "the gap between claims and fee revenues will continue to exist and most likely expand."

The number of businesses helped by the program hit a new low in 2009-10 — about 7,500, half the number of a decade ago — but the annual loan value still neared a billion dollars because loan limits were doubled to $500,000 last year.

There were a record 1,968 loss claims on the program last year, or an average of about $58,000 each. THE CANADIAN PRESS

TOURISTS TAKE FLIGHT 'IT TAKES TIME FOR THEM TO COME BACK'

EgyptAir is offering to lease 25 of its aircraft to other carriers, in a bid to offset staggering losses linked to recent unrest in the country.

EgyptAir chairman Hussein Massoud said the company has cancelled about 75 per cent of its flights and is losing about 80 per cent of its projected revenue.

Government statistics show that 210,000 tourists fled the country in the last week of January and that cancellations for February were depriving Egypt of about $825 million in tourism revenue.

But tour guide Sharif Youssef said he expects business to pick up soon.

"It's getting back to the way it was little by little. Just the same way people left a little at a time, it takes time for them to come back," he said.

LESS SHOUTING, MORE TALKING ON TRANSIT

Urban Compass

STEVE COLLINS

February is a particularly charmless month in the city, and the odd seasonal outburst of crankiness on buses is only to be expected.

Most of these are passing lapses, but one recent shouting match between an OC Transpo driver and a passenger has been immortalized on cellphone video. The set-to, which reportedly started with the driver complaining about the passenger smelling of cigarette smoke, quickly escalated into a pointless exchange of abuse and then a general public embarrassment when it was subsequently posted to YouTube.

Neither acting ATU president Mike Aldrich nor transit chair Dianne Deans condoned the driver's rankly unprofessional tirades, now the subject of official complaints, but they both mentioned an OC Transpo prohibition on photography on buses, which was so beside the point as to be insulting.

This amateur surveillance, and another video recently released to the media of a driver texting at the wheel, probably doesn't indicate a perfectly healthy, trusting relationship between drivers and passengers, but the video is not the problem here. The problem is what the video depicts.

It's been a long winter, and passengers and drivers have been cooped up together on the bus throughout, a recipe for cabin fever on wheels. The weather makes waits for buses both longer and colder, and tempers perhaps a bit shorter on all sides. Anyone can have a bad day, and it seems easier to have one in Ottawa in February.

Still, most riders and drivers manage daily to remember to treat each other as people, rather than as self-loading cargo or just a piece of the bus's machinery, respectively.

In one idiotic exchange from the video, the driver snarls, "I'm paid to drive you, not listen to you, so shut your mouth," and the passenger huffs, "You're paid to drive, so you shut up."

Both should be congratulated on the perfect bankrupt symmetry of their arguments, if nothing else. If each had taken his own counsel, everyone would have gotten where they were going a little faster and their antics wouldn't have achieved Internet infamy.

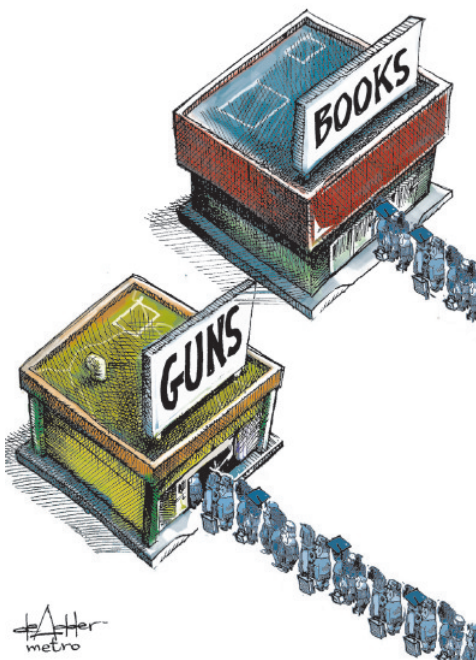

Meanwhile, there's a troublesome shutting-up exactly where there should be some serious talk: On the labour front, where the union has broken off contract talks, citing the city's own intransigence on scheduling.

Our last transit strike was prolonged by a pig-headed refusal to communicate on both sides, and this is no time for another dose of the silent treatment.

"Anyone can have a bad day, and it seems easier to have one in Ottawa in February."

lar backlash against royal wedding mania.

Most infamous are the royal wedding-themed condoms — an online sensation that featured prominently on the website of celebrity-obsessed OK! Magazine. William and Kate ashtrays allow smokers to rub their butts out in the face of the royal couple.

Then there are the William and Kate barf bags, made by Newcastle-based designer Lydia Leith. They feature a picture of the couple underneath the words "Throne Up."

Leith, 24, told The Associated Press she wanted to go about "poking fun at a social occasion from one side or another."

Metro picks who Oscar is going home with

Best Picture

Even with 10 nominees, it's come down to a race between two films: Early favourite The Social Network bloomed early, snatching up a dizzying number of critics' awards and the Golden Globe, but The King's Speech has been on an unstoppable run. The Academy will likely split along age lines for this one, with the older voters going for the more traditional The King's Speech. But our money's on The Social Network making a comeback.

Best Director

David Fincher feels like the front-runner for us with The Social Network, but Darren Aronofsky or David O. Russell could just as easily take it for Black Swan or The Fighter, respectively. And don't discount the Coen Brothers — longtime Oscar favourites — and their heavily nominated True Grit.

Best Actor

This is The King's Speech star Colin Firth's year, and no other nominee has the momentum he's built up for his portrayal of the royal stammerer.

Best Actress

We predict Annette Bening is going home empty-handed again. Though she's been nominated for an Oscar four times without winning, she's going to have to wait for No. 5, because this is Natalie Portman's award. The year of training, the physical transformation and the emotional gymnastics add up to the kind of showy performance the Academy eats up. And she's done nothing but increase her good will since being nominated.

Best Supporting Actor

Another two-horse toss-up, this one comes down to a battle between the latest in a distinguished career (Geoffrey Rush in The King's Speech) versus over-the-top showmanship (Christian Bale in The Fighter). While Rush has been cleaning up elsewhere, expect voters to side with Bale for the same reasons they'll pick Portman for Best Actress.

Best Supporting Actress

Here lies this year's true guessing game. The only nominee close to being considered a front-runner, Melissa Leo (The Fighter), has been handicapped by both a fellow nominee from her film (Amy Adams) and her own misguided, self-financed publicity campaign. Helena Bonham Carter could steal it for The King's Speech. One thing is for sure, Animal Kingdom standout Jacki Weaver doesn't stand a chance, even though hers was the best performance of the bunch.

Best Original Screenplay

Shut out of the Best Director category, expect Christopher Nolan to bring home this as a consolation prize for his brilliant, mind-bending Inception. Of course, the Academy could continue to snub him and give this one to David Seidler for The King's Speech.

Best Adapted Screenplay

Aaron Sorkin will win for The Social Network. It's not even a question at this point. If Sorkin looks surprised or unprepared at the podium, it's an act.

Best Animated Feature

With a nomination for Best Picture on its resumé and Oscar juggernaut Pixar behind it, Toy Story 3 seems like a sure thing, though we'd be just as happy if the surprise hit, How to Train Your Dragon, or art-house favourite The Illusionist pulled an upset.

Best Documentary Feature

We're really hoping Exit Through the Gift Shop wins, not just because it's an amazing film but because we want to see what notoriously camera-shy street artist Banksy does for an acceptance speech. But if the Academy is feeling more traditional than hip, expect Inside Job, a film about the financial crisis, to take the prize.

► The death of a pet is often as difficult as losing a family member ► Pet obituaries help

Pets are our best friends, faithful companions and family members. And not even death, it seems, can break that bond between animal and human.

Nowhere is that more apparent than in the increasing number of pet obituaries springing up in some newspapers and on social media sites.

On websites such as Doggy Heaven and Immortal Pets, on blogs and on countless Facebook pages, grief-stricken pet owners funnel their sadness into heartfelt tributes.

The obituaries — accompanied by photo montages, poems and notes of condolence from friends — are part therapy and part memorial.

The sites also testify to the coveted place pets hold in American culture. About 62 per cent of households include pets, according to the American Pet Products Association.

"It's a reflection of the social fabric," says Samantha Gowen, who writes the Orange County Register's Pet Tales blog, which regularly includes obituaries.

She notes that most pet owners are aware that they will likely outlive their animals, which gives the relationship a special poignancy. "There's a sense of empathy when it comes to pets and their lives," says Gowen.

Online obituaries offer pet owners a way find support and channel the pain of losing a pet.

Kristin Tomy, a 39-year-old from Indianapolis, was distraught after the sudden death of Dakota, her 12-year-old Siberian Husky, and was searching the Internet for consolation when she found Doggy Heaven.

Tomy posted an obit, which she says helped her

This soup gets its golden colour from the saffron threads, which are used to provide a slight lemony flavour and gorgeous orange hue.

Look for them in grocery store spice aisles or bulk food stores.

Ingredients:

- 4 cups (1 L) vegetable or chicken stock
- 1 tsp (5 mL) saffron threads
- 1 tbsp (15 mL) butter
- 4 oz (125 g) angel hair pasta (cappellini)
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 cup (125 mL) 35% whipping cream
- 2 tbsp (25 mL) chopped fresh Italian parsley

Preparation:

- 1 In a saucepan bring vegetable stock and saffron threads to boil. Reduce heat to simmer and add butter. Stir until melted.

- 2 Meanwhile, break pasta into about 2-inch (5 cm) pieces and add to stock. Cook, stirring occasionally for about 5 minutes or until pasta is al dente.

- 3 In a small bowl, whisk together eggs, cream and parsley. Gently pour mixture into stock, stirring constantly and cook for about 2 minutes or until set and thickened.

Tip: Have some freshly grated Parmesan to sprinkle over top before serving.

Green weddings

► Suggestions on how to say 'I do' to planning an eco-friendly wedding

Planning a wedding will make you and your spouse-to-be very aware of seemingly minor details. For example, it may become vitally important to match an exact shade of cream or to find a cathedral length veil. While you're making your decisions, consider how even the small details have an impact on the environment. Here are some suggestions to avoid excessive waste and put the planet on your priority list.

Invitations

Choose invitations made from 100 per cent recycled paper or make your own. You can also have guests RSVP by email or phone instead of by mail.

Centrepieces

Put on your creative hat and use natural materials like pinecones, decorative stones, seashells, willow branches, fruit, or flowers to arrange a display.

Reception

No matter how great the food is, there will always be leftovers when you have a wedding feast. Instead of throwing them away, arrange in advance to have the food delivered to a soup kitchen or shelter.

NEWS CANADA

Trinkets

Imprecise wedding trinkets either wind up in the trash or untouched on a dusty shelf.

► Options Instead, make a charitable donation as a wonderful way to help others while honouring your guests. Purchase eco-friendly gifts such as fruit trees, a rainwater-harvesting tank, a hand-dug well, or a fuel-efficient cooking stove from charities like Christian Children's Fund of Canada ► Becoming more aware of the environment during wedding planning will help you and your spouse-to-be make a better and cleaner world.

PURCHASING A CLEAN KITTY LITTER

What do I need to look for in a "green" kitty litter? Allison of Vancouver

Before you consider the type of kitty litter to buy for Fluffy, see what your city suggests when it comes to getting rid of the waste.

Characteristics to look for in a kitty litter include biodegradable products, because you'll be sending it to the landfill or composting it yourself at home. (Don't compost cat litter if you plan to spread it on edible plants, like those in your vegetable garden.) Many brands are also made from renewable plant materials like corn or wheat. These are made from by-products like corn cobs rather than food-grade sources. You may have also seen recycled paper pellets or some made from wood waste, typically pine.

What all of these options also have in common is that they tend to be chemical-free and fragrance-free. Definitely avoid scented products. Instead, deodorize with baking soda by keeping an open box nearby.

Moving a must

► New sedentary behaviour guidelines take aim at couch potato culture ► Suggest limits for idle behaviour

The Canadian Society for Exercise Physiology's guidelines, unveiled Tuesday, focus on minimizing behaviours that involve little physical movement and the low expenditure of energy.

The group recommends children and youth aged five to 17 limit recreational screen time – including watching TV, playing passive video games and using the computer – to no more than two hours daily.

The guidelines suggest youngsters scale back on time spent indoors and sitting for extended periods. They also recommend limiting use of sedentary transport, like travelling by bus or car.

Instead, kids aged five to 11 are encouraged to walk to school with a group of neighbourhood kids; for youth 12 to 17, it's recommended they walk or bike with friends. Instead of teens texting their friends, it's suggested they visit with them instead.

The recommendations come just weeks after the society released revised physical activity guidelines for Canadians.

Children and youth are advised to get at least 60 minutes of moderate- to vigorous-intensity physical activity daily.

But under current guidelines, CSEP said only seven per cent of youngsters are active enough to meet those targets. Meanwhile, they're spending an average 8.6 hours a day – 62 per cent of their waking hours – being sedentary.

"We're not saying replace sedentary behaviour with exercise per se – (although) that would be wonderful. But replace it with something else other than sedentary behaviour," said Mark Tremblay, chair of the physical activity guidelines committee.

"If that's just standing more often, then wonderful. If it's walking more often, if it's doing a hobby that doesn't have you sitting immobile, then what our research shows is that that is associated with a decrease in health risks over and above the benefits that kids get from high-level physical activity."

Jotting down all that brings joy

► Can gratitude journals inspire a new outlook on life?
► Experts continue to disagree

"If you don't like something, change it; if you can't change it, change the way you think about it."

This quote, by children's author Mary Engelbreit, summarizes the past few years of Faisal Sethi's life. It's a path that led the creative director to his start-up, which encourages users to write down things they're grateful for every day.

In 2009, the 35-year-old had started caring for his father, whose health was quickly deteriorating. He had left his job to care for him full-time but soon discovered it was too great of a task.

The weight of his problems led Sethi, who lives in Ottawa, to research the idea of happiness and how to attain it. He spent hours looking over academic papers on the subject, and over and over Sethi would read about the importance of gratitude journals.

Gratitude journals are diaries meant to document what you are most grateful for. The concept became widely popular after talk show host Oprah Winfrey promoted the idea.

"I started actively doing a gratitude journal but also realized there were some limitations," said Sethi. "Happiness isn't an intellectually passive state. We can engage in activities and tools to increase that happiness."

And so, Sethi founded Happyrambles, a free website that emails users the question "What are you happy for today?" Their responses are stored in a private online gratitude journal, and they have the option of sharing it with friends.

"It's taught me to be in the moment, whether it's walking my dog, or the smell of his breath or the crisp air on a Sunday morning..."

FAISAL SETHI, FOUNDER OF HAPPYRAMBLES

He said by being notified by email, which is sent in the evening (though users can change the time of day) the website is actively engaging users to think and then write about what they're most grateful for each day. Sethi said his website is more environmentally friendly than a physical journal since it saves on paper and is more secure.

Happyrambles was officially launched in January. It's currently in the beta phase and has 1,000 users around the world.

Sethi said that after writing in his gratitude journal, he "started seeing the world a little bit differently."

"You find yourself actively looking for the good things in life on a daily basis," he said.

► Faisal Sethi, founder of Happyrambles, has found that regularly documenting the things he is thankful for has affected his general outlook on life.

However, some experts on happiness question the notion of writing a gratitude journal daily.

Mark Holder is an associate professor of psychology at the University of British Columbia, who specializes in positive psychology. He acknowledged that gratitude is linked to "positive flourishes" and research suggests that people who engage in gratitude activities are happier. However, Holder questioned the structure of Sethi's website.

In researching other studies on the topic, Holder found that people are happiest when they show gratitude for three things, once a week. He noted that it's also key to add variety.

"You have to change the dimensions," he said. "One day I'll be happy for something physically, one day I'll be happy for my path, or something I'm looking forward to in the future, or community, friends or family. You've got to switch it up."

Holder said that if a user is encouraged to write something every day, it can eventually be a burden.

"It can be seen as a chore and if you do it too often, it can actually reduce happiness," he said.

Holder recommends taking a different approach, by asking family or friends what they are grateful for on a weekly basis, perhaps at the dinner table. He also suggests starting a gratitude album, similar to a scrapbook, with tactile pieces from happy memories or writing letters to people who've had positive effects in your life.

Still, Sethi credits his daily gratitude journal for changing his perspective.

"It's taught me to be in the moment, whether it's walking my dog, or the smell of his breath or the crisp air on a Sunday morning," he said. "It really improves the quality of life." THE CANADIAN PRESS

What's with these forgetful teens?

► New research says it may just be a normal part of brain development

A lost hoodie here, a forgotten backpack there. What's with teens and brain fog?

Parenting teens and tweens can sometimes feel like kindergarten redux, except adolescent attitudes are edgier and their missing and broken stuff costs more. In addition, their table manners are atrocious, some don't like to shower or use deodorant, and they may forget to brush their teeth.

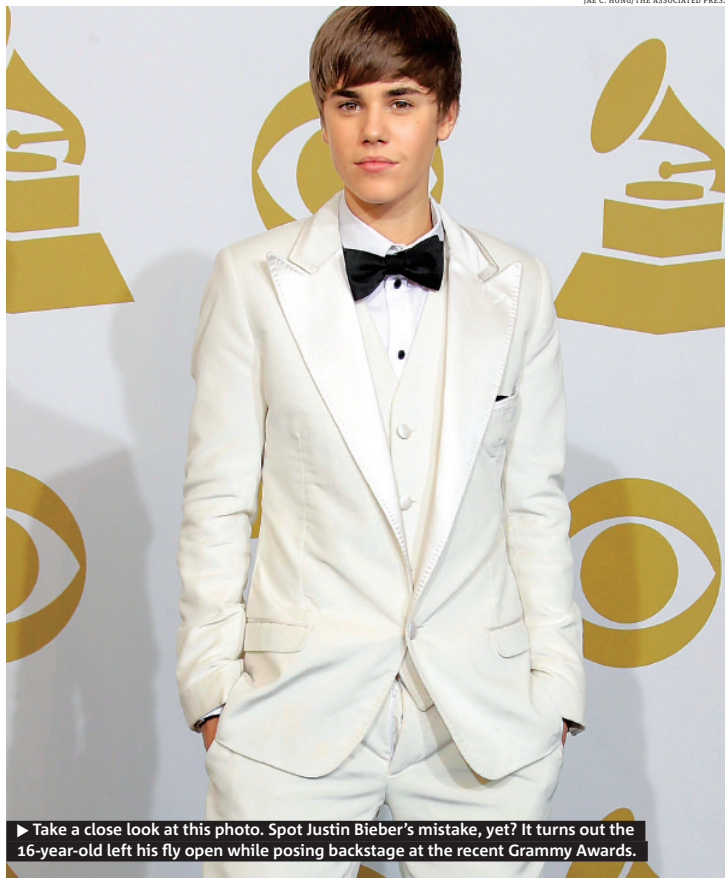

These are moments that set parents thinking: Why is my kid still skipping through life on another planet? When's he going to land back on Earth?

The short answer might be later rather than sooner, at least when it comes to their brains.

Most scientists once believed the human brain reached full development by age 12. But research based on improved brain scan technology indicates that co-ordination of certain functions continues to come together through the early 20s, said Lawrence Steinberg, a psychology professor at Temple University.

"It's not that a teen is forgetting," he said. "It's more like they're much more drawn to the immediate reward of a situation than adults are and they're much less likely to think ahead and think about the future. The future can be just an hour later."

Steinberg regularly hears from parents as the author of the recently revised You and Your Adolescent: The Essential Guide for Ages 10-25.

"These days I get almost as many questions from parents about dealing with 20-somethings as I do about teenagers," he said.

Aimee Stern in Silver Spring, Md., is dealing with a full-on black hole fed by her 11-year-old daughter and 15-year-old son. "We've had multiple lost cellphones, house keys, winter coats," she said. "I'm seeing it get better now in sophomore year of high school. It's been replaced by total obnoxiousness."

Does she think mom and dad are a match for the scattered adolescent brain? Stern relaxed after digging into the latest research herself as part of her work writing a guide about teens and alcohol use.

"It was such a relief to learn that I wasn't crazy, and my kids' forgetfulness was just a normal part of brain development," Stern said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRAIN FOG

When fog becomes too much to handle

Brain fog is a life force at the Waterville, Maine, house of Marc Pitman.

He has a simple, standing request for his 11-year-old son: Shut your bedroom door.

"He'll go to close the door, forget on the way and come back to the living room having left his door open."

Second on dad's list of peeves: "Using utensils at the table, not his hands."

Pitman relies on "auctioneer-like repetition" of commonsense instructions.

Shelly Walker has a different strategy. She's through paying for the stuff her 11-year-old daughter loses.

"In a week she lost one running shoe and her iPod Touch at school. She understands the value of cash."

Sally Treadwell in Boone, N.C., has two girls, 17 and 14. Like Walker, she no longer pays to replace all the lost, broken, destroyed or submerged stuff, but she isn't ready to blame the brain.

"I think the idea of teens being incapable of hanging onto stuff because of their developing brains is a very modern idea," she said.

"There were five of us in our family. We didn't have much money and what we had we hung on to. Part of growing up is learning to be responsible for yourself. The world isn't disposable."

Time for a lunch bag makeover

► Get creative with your child's midday meals

Are you bored with packing the same lunch for your family every day?

Are your kids coming home with half eaten sandwiches and uneaten apples?

This time of year many children are in need of a lunch bag makeover to give them the energy they need to get through the afternoon.

Breakfast for Learning suggests following these three easy tips to brighten up your child's brown bag lunch.

Food for thought

► More information on the importance of healthy eating and great recipe ideas can be found online at breakfastforlearning.ca.

Alter the shape

Whether it's cutting an orange into easy-to-eat bite-sized pieces, slicing up a mundane apple to mimic a beautiful fan or simply cutting a sandwich into three pieces instead of two, changing the appearance of your child's food will spark their interest and give them the enthusiasm they need to eat the nutritious lunch that you've packed.

Makeover your sandwich

Transform your ordinary sandwich into an impressive entrée.

Leave the bread at home and stuff your sandwich fixings into a pita, roll them into a wrap, or toss them over a bed of lettuce.

Stimulate your child's ► Promote healthy eating in your household by discussing the positive aspects of the food your family is consuming.

creativity by simply packing ingredients and letting your child assemble his/her own lunch. (Hint: kids love making mini sandwiches out of dinner rolls or crackers.)

Introduce something new

We all know that variety is the spice of life, so why not spice up your lunch bag with something exotic?

Once a week surprise your child with a new fruit or vegetable and at the end of the day have a family discussion about what everyone thought of this unfamiliar product.

Roddick snaps Raonic's streak

Milos Raonic's dazzling run at the ATP Tour event in Memphis ended in defeat.

The 20-year-old Canadian dropped a hard-fought 7-6 (7), 6-7 (11), 6-4 decision to American Andy Roddick in the final of the Regions Morgan Keegan Championships yesterday.

Raonic, of Thornhill, Ont., was gunning for his second consecutive ATP Tour victory after winning last weekend in San Jose, Calif.

His surprising two-week performance will move him to around No. 37 in the tennis world rankings. He finished 2010 ranked No. 156.

The top-seeded Roddick becomes the eighth American with at least 30 titles, only three behind the late Arthur Ashe.

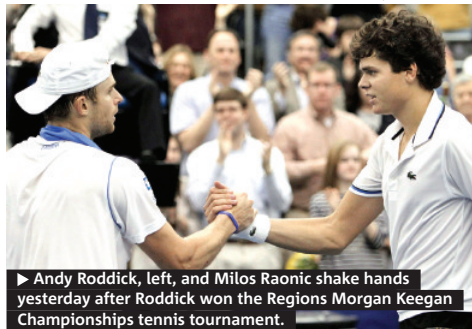

"I think I was very fortunate. I feel like I got outplayed, I just stuck around and kept trying," Roddick said. "What a memorable 30th victory for me. I couldn't be happier to do it in Memphis."

Raonic had 32 more aces and finished the week with 125. He hit 150 miles per hour to hold serve in the 10th game of the third set, but it wasn't enough.

This was the first meeting between Raonic and Roddick, who ranks behind only Roger Federer and Rafael Nadal for career wins among active players.

Home-field edge works for Flames

► Boston Bruins the only other home team to win outdoor game

The Calgary Flames bucked a trend of host teams losing NHL outdoor games by defeating the Montreal Canadiens 4-0 in the Tim Hortons Heritage Classic yesterday.

Rene Bourque scored a pair of goals, Anton Babchuk scored short-handed and Alex Tanguay also struck for Calgary in front of 41,022 on a cold, clear night at McMahon Stadium.

Flames goalie Miikka

Kiprusoff stopped 39 shots for his fourth shutout this season, while Montreal counterpart Carey Price turned away 33 of 37 in the loss.

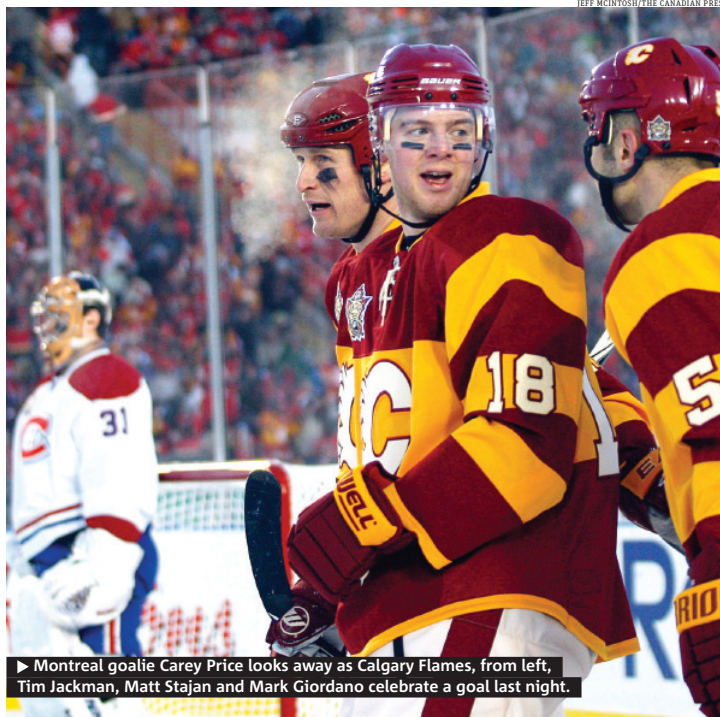

Heading into the game, visiting teams were 4-1 outside dating back to the last Heritage Classic in 2003.

The victory vaulted the Flames over four teams in the Western Conference. They moved into a tie with fifth-place Nashville.

The Flames (31-22-8) have collected points in 18 of their last 20 games, but the conference is so tight less than 10 points separates third from 12th.

Montreal (31-22-7) dropped to 1-2-2 in their last five games.

The temperature didn't quite make it to the predicted high of -8 C. It was -9 C when the puck dropped, but the wind made it feel like -17 C. THE CANADIAN PRESS

To my Marmot, I love you more than I thought I could ever love anyone. This past year has been the most wonderful of my entire life. I look forward to a lifetime of them. Love so much,
YOUR BOBCAT

I just want to send love to my bf M.c. His been my rock through my life. I just wanna say thank you...je t'aime cheri... Yours truly Angel m Wallace..

Track 26 Lady: Thank you for returning my belongings and restoring my faith in humanity. You are one in a million!

Debby, I love you dearly, my bestfriend. Times are going to be tough, but I will be by your side for every step of it. Be strong, and have faith.

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 Use your powers of persuasion to get others to help you with something important. Because you are so impatient you may be inclined to go it alone but you won't get far on your own.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 You are in exactly the right frame of mind to take a few risks, and chances are they will pay off in a big way.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Take the initiative and make things happen. If you sit there waiting for others to make the first move you won't get anywhere worth going today, so stop thinking so much and just act.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Everyone seems to approve of what you are planning, but don't take that as a green light just yet because there are a still a few loose ends that need to be tidied up before the time is right.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23 You are advised not to take anything, yourself included, too seriously today. Cultivate a frame of mind where life becomes a game and winning and losing are not in themselves that important.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22 Take responsibility for your thoughts, your words and your actions and don't try to blame others if things don't work out exactly as you had planned. Maybe that's not such a bad thing.

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 How much do you trust someone you work with? Enough to trust them with a secret you don't want the whole world to know?

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Push your luck a bit today. Take the kind of chances you usually prefer to avoid.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 A good deed done with no thought of reward for yourself will have the kind of positive consequences that even a far-sighted Sag cannot have anticipated.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 This is one of the best times of the year for socializing and mixing with people from all walks of life, so don't sit there by yourself, get out into the world and make things happen.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Mercury, Mars and Neptune join forces in your birth sign today, making this the perfect time to give wings to your imagination. The world needs people who are not afraid to act on their dreams. In short, the world needs you.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Stand back from yourself today and try to understand why you think and act in certain ways. Once you realize that so much of what you do is done out of habit it will be easier to change your ways.
